7th AUSTRALIAN INFANTRY BRIGADE

Gaptain Percy Herbert CHERRY. During the attack on LAGNICOURT on the morning of 28th March 1917, this Officer was in Command of "C" Goy who stormed and cleared the village. His gallantry and bravery is beyond description. After all the Officers of his Company were casualties, he carried on in face of fierce opposition, and mopped up the town in a most escretul and determined manner. He continuously sent reports of the progress being made, and when held up for some time by an enemy strong point, immediately organized Lewis gunners, bombers, and riftle bombers, and last the rush which captured this position. His leadership, colness, and heavery set a wonderful example to his men. On clearing the village he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the assistance of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counterstatok made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the gat about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all armund him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 dermans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Sattalion attacked the MAIT TRENOH North of WarkleNOCURT on Markh 1st 1917.	Schedul'e	Unit	Reg.No.	Rank and Name	Action for which commended	Recommd by	Honor or Reward	To be lef blank morning of 28th March 1917, this Officer was in Command of "O" Goy, who stormed and cleared the village. His gallantry and bravery is beyond description. After all the Officers of his Company were easualties, he carried on in face of fierce opposition, and mopped up the town in a most careful and determined manner. He continuously sent reports of the progress being made, and when held up for some time by an enemy strong point, immediately organized Lewis gunners, bombers, and right bombers, and led the rush which captured this position. His leader- ship, ocolness, and bravery set a wonderful example to his men. Cn clearing the village he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the assi stence of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counter- attack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. During the day he persumally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MAIT TRENCH was in Command of "C" Goy. who stormed and cleared the village. His gallantry and bravery is beyond description. After all the Officers of his Company were casualties, he carried on in face of fierce opposition, and mopped up the town in a most careful and determined manner. He continuously sent reports of the progress being made, and when held up for some time by an enemy atrong point, immediately organized Lewis gunners, bombers, and rifle bombers, and led the rush which captured this position. His leadership, coolness, and bravery set a wonderful example to his men. On clearing the village he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the asd stance of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counterstatack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three cocasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MAIT TRENOH				Captain	During the attack on LAGNICOURT on the cleared the village. His gallantry and bravery is beyond description. After all the Officers of his Company were casualties, he carried on in face of fierce opposition, and mopped up the town in a most careful and determined manner. He continuously sent reports of the progress being made, and when held up for some time by an enemy strong point, immediately organized Lewis gumners, bombers, and rifle bombers, and leader which captured this position. His leader ship, coolness, and bravery set a wonderful example to his men. On clearing the village he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the assistance of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counterstands made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all arumnd him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he persumally killed 9 dermans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three cocasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MAIT TRENOH		26th En.
bravery is beyond description. After all the Officers of his Company were casualties, he carried on in face of flerce opposition, and mopped up the town in a most careful and determined manner. He continuously sent reports of the progress being made, and when held up for some time by an enemy strong point, immediately organized Lewis gunners, bombers, and rifle bombers, and led the rush which captured this postion. His leader- ship, occlness, and bravery set a wonderful example to his men. On clearing the village he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the asd stance of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counter- attack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a p.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MAIT TRENCH			1 · 1	CHERRY.			V.U.
the Officers of his Company were casualties, he carried on in face of fierce opposition, and mopped up the town in a most careful and determined manner. He continuously sent reports of the progress being made, and when held up for some time by an enemy strong point, immediately organized Lewis gunners, bombers, and rifle bombers, and led the rush which captured this position. His leader- ship, coolness, and bravery set a wonderful example to his men. On clearing the village he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the assi stance of Lisut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counter- attack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he persumally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Eattalion attacked the MAII TRENCH		ANI.F.	j		cleared the village. His gallantry and	~
he carried on in face of flerce opposition, and mopped up the town in a most careful and determined manner. He continuously sent reports of the progress being made, and when held up for some time by an enemy atrong point, immediately organized Lewis gunners, bombers, and rifle bombers, and led the rush which captured this position. His leadership, coolness, and bravery set a wonderful example to his men. On clearing the village he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the assistance of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counterattack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortumately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MAIT TRENCH			f.		bravery is beyond description. After all	2 \(\tilde{\chi}\).
and mopped up the town in a most careful and determined manner. He continuously sent reports of the progress being made, and when held up for some time by an enemy atrong point, immediately organized Lewis gunners, bombers, and rifle bombers, and led the rush which captured this position. His leadership, ocolness, and bravery set a wonderful example to his men. On clearing the village he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the ass stance of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counterattack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a p.s.o. when the Battalion attacked the MAIT TRENCH						- ' determined manner. He continuously sent reports of the progress being made, and when held up for some time by an enemy strong point, immediately organized Lewis gunners, bombers, and rifle bombers, and led the rush which captured this position. His leader- ship, coolness, and bravery set a wonderful example to his men. On clearing the village he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the assi stance of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counter- attack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all arunnd him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MAIT TRENCH		Ro.				3 reports of the progress being made, and when held up for some time by an enemy strong point, immediately organized Lewis gunners, bombers, and rifle bombers, and lsd the rush which captured this position. His leader—ship, coolness, and bravery set a wonderful example to his men. On clearing the village he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the assistance of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counter—statack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a p.s.o. when the Battalion attacked the MAIT TRENCH			, , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , , 			Ī		• held up for some time by an enemy strong point, immediately organized Lewis gunners, bombers, and rifle bombers, and led the rush which captured this position. His leader- ship, ocolness, and bravery set a wonderful example to his men. On clearing the village he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the assistance of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counter- attack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all arunnd him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MAIT TRENCH			- 1:	· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·		, 19 point, immediately organized Lewis gunners, bombers, and rifle bombers, and led the rush which captured this position. His leader- ship, coolness, and bravery set a wonderful example to his men. On clearing the village he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the assistance of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counter- attack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MAIT TRENCH						۵ bombers, and rifle bombers, and led the rush which captured this position. His leader- ship, coolness, and bravery set a wonderful example to his men. On clearing the village he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the assistance of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counter- attack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post; encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three cocasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MAIT TRENCH			•			į, ship, coolness, and bravery set a wonderful example to his men. On clearing the village he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the assi stance of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counter- attack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MALT TRENCH					bombers, and rifle bombers, and 1sd the rush) example to his men. On clearing the village he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the assistance of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counterattack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MALT TRENCH			the state of the			3	•
he took charge of the situation, and with about 100 men, and with the assistance of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counterattack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MALT TRENCH						Ž		٠, about 100 men, and with the assistance of Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counter- attack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MALT TRENCH			. 			8
Lieut. STAPLETON, was mainly instrumental in beating off a most determined counterattack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MALT TRENCH						3 beating off a most determined counter- attack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MALT TRENCH						4 attack made by the enemy with about 1000 men. He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MAIT TRENCH						7
He was wounded in the leg at about 6.30 a.m. but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MALT TRENCH						7	• but would not leave his post, encouraging all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MALT TRENCH			•			\
all around him to hold out in the face of fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. Puring the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MALT TRENCH	40 , fierce opposition. He was unfortunately killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. Puring the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MALT TRENCH					all around him to hold out in the face of			· killed by an enemy shell at about 4.30 p.m. During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MALT TRENCH						•	•
During the day he personally killed 9 Germans. He had previous to this attack been wounded on three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MALT TRENCH		8 three occasions, and was recommended for a D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MAIT TRENCH
D.S.O. when the Battalion attacked the MALT TRENCH		7				on
	- -
North of WARLENCOURT on Marbh 1st 1917.						CRENCH
					North of WARLENCOURT on Marbh 1st 1917.			